Audit outcomes of the Free State province

CONSOLIDATED GENERAL REPORT on NATIONAL and PROVINCIAL audit outcomes

Our reputation promise/mission

The Auditor-General of South Africa (AGSA) has a constitutional mandate and, as the Supreme Audit Institution (SAI) of South Africa, it exists to strengthen our country's democracy by enabling oversight, accountability and governance in the public sector through auditing, thereby building public confidence.

Slow progress towards clean audits with slightly more regressions than improvements

Limited progress made in addressing five key risk areas and regression in overall status of key controls

FOREWORD

It is a pleasure to present to Parliament my 2011-12 general report on audit outcomes of departments, legislatures, public entities and other entities in the national and provincial spheres of government.

Inresponse to the 2010-11 auditout comes, commitments were made by the executive and oversight bodies to intensify their efforts in bringing positive change within the administration.

Despitemy expectation that these commitments would drive improvements towards clean audits, the audit outcomes for the year show a general stagnant trend, with less than a quarterofauditees obtaining clean audit opinions and 52 not able to sustain their prior year clean audit opinion. My report shows that many leaders did not own and drive these commitments, so the commitments are left to flounder until the next audit starts. In this regard, I single out two significant commitments made a year ago:

• The executive committed to meet with my office quarterly for at least an hour. About 78% of them have made time at least three times in the past year to meet and share the results of our assessment of the risks and controls and to consider the status of commitments made and make new commitments. Although the engagements were well received, only small movements in audit outcomes can be seen. This was due to frequent leadership changes resulting in disruption in the implementation of commitments, our message being ignored, or our conversation not being compelling and persuasive enough. We therefore undertake to continue with the quarterly engagements, but with greater emphasis on quality conversations leading to increased impact. Parliament and legislatures committed to improve the collaboration between their respective public accounts committees and portfolio committees. We have yet to see more concentrated efforts in this regard as an uncoordinated approach will continue to weaken the effectiveness of oversight.

Of special concern is the increase in auditees with material findings on noncompliance with legislation, bringing it to 74%. Even though I have stressed for the past three years the urgent need to address the quality of the financial statements submitted for audit and weaknesses in supply chain management, human resource management and information technology controls, there has been minimal improvement.

The usefulness and reliability of the annual performance reports continue to improve, which is gratifying. I amnowable to make a clearer assessment of service delivery risks but not to the full extent necessary (as some key departments responsible for national outcomes, such as those in the health, education and human settlement sectors, continue to have material shortcomings). Based on the annual performance reports, about 42% of auditees achieved 80% or fewer of their planned service delivery targets, while some departments had significantly underspent their conditional grants and capital budgets. My report further highlights risks to the financial health of national and provincial government flowing from poor budget management, cash and debtors management of departments and the financial management of some public entities. These indicators reflect that the fiscus could be placed under further pressure if such risks are not addressed.

In this general report, I raise three areas that require corrective steps by those charged with governance to achieve improvements in the audit outcomes:

• Vacancies in key positions and instability in leadership positions affect the pace of sustainable improvements. Ineffective performance management is evident at some auditees, which means that officials who perform poorly are not dealt with decisively. A concerted effort is required to address the challenges in human resource capacity and productivity. Effective internal controls to prevent, detect and correct non-compliance with legislation and mistakes in the financial and performance reports are lacking. Overall the effectiveness of key controls has regressed, as they were not designed and implemented in a sustainable manner. Checks and balances for all key processes, monthly reporting and validation processes to ensure the credibility of all management information are basic controls which skilled professional should be able to implement.

Government should be monitored in a thorough, diligent and collaborativemanner. My office only provides independent assurance on the credibility of financial and performance information and compliance with selected legislation. We are not the only provider of assurance to the citizens that government is delivering services in a responsible and accountable manner. The monitoring functions vested in senior management, accounting officers, internal audit, audit committees and executive authorities should be better exercised so that audit outcomes and service delivery issues are dealt with through self-monitoring, while audit provides an external validation. The treasuries, offices of the premiers, public service administration and other coordinating/monitoring institutions should fulfil their role envisaged in legislation to guide, support, coordinate and monitor government. The legislatures and Parliament should be scrupulous and courageous in performing their oversight function in order to make an impact on clean administration. My assessment (detailed in this report) is that not all of these role players are providing the level of assurance required to create the momentum towardsimprove audit outcomes.

A common reaction to the audit outcomes is the question posed by many about the need for officials to be accountable, and for there to be consequences for poor performance, misappropriation of state resources and fraud. In response, we have highlighted in a separate booklet, the range of legislation at the government's disposal that enables remedies to be applied where there has been transgression. These must be used where necessary to reverse the culture of "business-as-usual". It is my assessment that the full power of the law is yet to be activated, leading to commentators asking "What can be done?" or saying "There are no consequences". Highlighting these remedies provides a starting point for our responsible leaders and the relevant legislatures and departments to take action. All parties have to play their part.

Although progress towards clean audits is slow, I am encouraged by examples of commitments by leaders and officials which translated into improved audit outcomes and I am confident similar results can be achieved by all auditees. In conjunction with various key role players, my office has provided input towards the development of solutions to the challenges highlighted in this report, and will in future share assessments of progress in joint sessions with the Head of Government Business and Parliament and through similar engagements in the provinces.

It is through all our efforts and the work of auditors that we will contribute towards strengthening our democracy through auditing.

AUDIT OUTCOMES OF THE FREE STATE PROVINCE

The audit outcomes for the Free State Province show a year-on-year steady improvement towards unqualified audit opinions. It is commendable that three of the leading departments, namely the Office of the Premier, Free State Provincial Legislature and the provincial treasury received clean audit opinions, while the Department of Cooperative Governance and Traditional Affairs successfully dealt with its prior year qualification and moved to an unqualified opinion with findings. The other two improvements are the departments of Education and Agriculture and Rural Development which addressed their prior year qualifications on assets to move to unqualified opinions with findings. The only regression for the province was the Department of Human Settlements which received a qualified audit opinion.

The slow progress towards clean opinions can be mainly attributed to a lack of stability in leadership positions, including that of chief financial officer; the inadequate implementation and monitoring of basic key controls to ensure that bothfinancial and non-financial reports are reliable; and the lack of consequences for poor performance or transgressions, especially in light of the continuous increase in irregular expenditure.

The province has made little progress in implementing internal controls, which raises a concern regarding the sustainability of the current outcomes. Although the quality of financial information submitted for audit improved slightly, very little was done to improve the areas of reporting on PDOs, HR management and information technology. The controls in the areas of supply chain management regressed substantially.

In the previous year the executives committed to meet with the Auditor-General of South Africa for 60 minutes every quarter so as to work towards improving the audit outcomes. This commitment was honoured to a certain extent but most of the engagements happened towards the end of the audit, which resulted in the departments putting an effort into improving the audit outcomes during the last two weeks of the audits. Had the commitment to meet with the AGSA every quarter been honoured the quality of the interactions would have been higher and would have allowed the executives to pro-actively address the issues with sustainable solutions.

The appointment of cluster Audit committees yielded positive results in promoting their effectiveness; however, improved interaction between the Audit committees and the political leadership can contribute to better and sustained audit outcomes. The Internal audit units are equally important as management has to react to the findings of the Internal audit to strengthen the implementation of internal controls.

The provincial public accounts committee did not table any resolutions during the financial year, which contributed to the overall lack of consequences in the province for not addressing findings. The portfolio committees did not function effectively during the financial year and had no impact towards improving audit outcomes.

During the roadshow the Premier renewed his commitment that the executive and provincial leadership would honour their undertaking to meet quarterly with the Auditor-General of South Africa, to fill all critical vacancies and to ensure that all performance agreements are in place and continuously monitored. Furthermore, accounting officers must report monthly to the provincial treasury on the progress of investigations into irregular and fruitless and wasteful expenditure.

The AGSA leadership will continue to improve the quality and impact of their interactions and provide insights into the root causes of the status of internal controls.
